NINETEENTH-CENTURY KASHRUS OBSERVANCE

Berman, Publications of the American Jewish Historical Society (1893-1961); 1947; 37, AJHS Journal, pg. 31 ff. The article is available online at <http://www.ajhs.org/reference/adaje.cfm>.

During the latter part of 19th century and the first half of the 20th century, many European Jews viewed America as a treife medina (a non-kosher land) from the perspective of traditional Jewish religious observance. It was felt that it was virtually impossible to remain observant in America, and many Jews proved this was indeed the case, as they or their children abandoned much of their religious practices once they arrived in this country.

This was not necessarily the case, however, for the German immigrants who came in the 1840s and 1850s. Many of them were strict in their observance, doing their best to live according to the Torah. It was only in the 1860s and later, when the Reform movement swept the country, that things changed drastically and ritual observance declined.

The first Jewish immigrants were men [and women] of strong Jewish loyalties and generally adhered to traditional Jewish practices. They were quite innocent of reformist ideology. To them Judaism meant living in accordance with the traditional orthodox code. As soon as a handful of these pioneers settled in one place, they usually instituted congregational high holiday worship.

Shortly thereafter they bought a piece of land for a burial ground. With little delay they then advertised for a man to come to serve them as reader [Chazan], ritual slaughterer (shochet), circumciser (mohel) and teacher. If their religious practice was technically faulty, as it often was, it was not due to indifference on their part, but to circumstances beyond their control. Evidence of their desire to do their religious duty [comes from] the records we have of their observance of the three basic practices-kosher diet, circumcision and Sabbath.

There is considerable evidence that until the latter part of the 19th century many Jews did their best to maintain traditional religious observance when it came to kashrus, ritual circumcision (bris milah) and Shabbos.

A licensed shochet was to be found in many settlements with even relatively small Jewish populations. In places where the Jewish population was too small to support a licensed ritual slaughterer, the service was provided by qualified, unpaid individuals who had studied the laws of shechita. In fact, even in the seventeenth century it was not unusual to find baalei batim who were qualified ritual slaughterers.

Illustrative is the example of Michael Hart, Indian trader and merchant who, in 1773, set up shop in Easton, Pa. He acted as his own shochet. George Washington once ate a kosher meal. It was when he stopped for lunch at the home of this Michael Hart.

In 1846 a Mr. Umstetter served as a volunteer shochet in Norfolk, Virginia. He slaughtered twice weekly for the Jews who lived in this town.

Prior to his arrival a number of Jews ate non-kosher food.

Samuel Adler, the father of Cyrus Adler, studied the slaughter of fowl with the Philadelphia shochet Leopold Sulzberger before he moved to Van Buren, Arkansas, in 1858. He mastered this skill because he wanted to be sure that his family and the other Jews of Van Buren would have kosher poultry.

Congregation B'nai Sholom was founded in Chicago in May 1852 by eleven individuals, many of whom came from the Prussian province of Posen. In 1854 Edward Meirs agreed to serve as the congregation's unpaid shochet for one year. There was a non-professional shochet in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, in 1858, and in Pueblo, Colorado, in 1870. A letter he wrote gives an interesting description of Jewish life in Pueblo:

Pueblo, March 20, 1870.

It will afford you some interest to hear from this portion of the world, and to learn that even here there are quite a number of Jews respected and respectable. We are 120 miles south of Denver City, which, as you know, is quite thriving.

We have experienced great difficulty in complying with our religious duties, but these are lessening every day. Having learnt Shechitah some years since, I make practical use of it here. We have the finest and the healthiest cattle, requiring but little examination. Of course, as yet we have no Synagogue, and the Sabbath is not observed, but there is a prevailing feeling that we should be Jews in fact, as we are in name.

Another advantage we are beginning to have is as it regards circumcision. We were formerly compelled to send young ones 120 miles to have that rite performed, and now I have already officiated several times with success. I have no doubt, that, ere long, it will be in my power to afford you the information, that, even in Pueblo, the Jews observe the dietary enactments, honor the Sabbath day, and conduct themselves in every way becoming the descendants of those who suffered persecution, even martyrdom, for the cause they deemed right. - N.

Volunteer shochtim served either isolated families or tiny settlements. Larger communities consisting of 10 or more families did their best to hire professional shochtim. Anglo-Jewish publications often carried advertisements like these:

Wanted - Columbus, Ind., Congregation Chisuk Emunah, shohet, baal kora and teacher in Hebrew. (The Occident, July 6, 1859)

Wanted - By the Israelite Congregation of Wilmington, N. C., Chasan, Shochat, and Mohel, and also to take charge of a Hebrew and English school. (The Hebrew Leader, August 2, 1867)

Wanted - By the German Congregation Beth Hasholom of Williamsport, Pa., a Chazan, Shochet, and Teacher, who is able to thoroughly instruct the children in German. Must be himself a German. Salary, $600, and perquisites....(The Jewish Messenger, August 19, 1870)

Unfortunately, during the latter part of the 19th century a marked change occurred. Many Jews, influenced by the Reform movement, began to disregard the tenets of kashrus. Shochtim began to disappear from settlements that contained only a small Jewish population.

People began to openly neglect the observance of the dietary laws both at home and in public. It got to the point where on December 26, 1879, the Anglo-Jewish newspaper The Jewish Messenger published a letter from Reverend H. P. Mendes in which he condemned the serving of non-kosher food at banquets conducted under the aegis of Jewish organizations.

Dr. Yitzchok Levine served as a professor in the Department of Mathematical Sciences at Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, New Jersey before retiring in 2008. MOSES AND THE HOLY LAND

Date 03:04, 04-9, 11

JESUS WAS THE MESSIAH, THE CHOSEN ONE.
JESUS NEEDED ENOUGH OF BELIEVERS TO OVERPOWER
HIS CRUCIFIXION AND FOR GOD TO INTERVENE.
JESUS WAS GOD AND A CHOSEN HUMAN AND HAD TO TAKE CHANCES LIKE EVERYONE ELSE.
THEIR IS A WAR ON THE OTHER SIDE A STRUGGLE
BETWEEN GOD AND SATAN. GOD AND SATAN BOTH
FIGHTING FOR POWER FROM THE PEOPLE.
THEY BOTH CONTROL BACK AND FORTH
THE MINDS OF THE PEOPLE.
THE WORDS THAT JESUS PREACHED CAME DIRECTLY
FROM GOD AND JESUS HAD BELIEVERS BUT NEEDED
MORE TO ACCOMPLISH BUT WAS CUT DOWN AT HIS PRIME BEFORE FINISHING AND GETTING THE HELP FROM GOD. IF JESUS HAD MORE TIME IT WOULD OF SAVED HIS LIFE.
GOD AND SATAN KNOW THE PAST AND FUTURE.
MOSES HAD ENOUGH OF PEOPLE AND GOD BACKED HIM UP.

GOD CREATED THE WORLD AND NEVER LEFT.
THE GOOD ON THIS EARTH WOULD NEVER BE IF GOD WAS NOT HERE. THE HARDSHIP TO THE JEWISH PEOPLE CAME FROM SATAN.
GOD WANTS PEOPLE TO KNOW HOW IMPORTANT
JESUS WAS. GOD IS WAITING AND NEEDS THE POWER FROM HIS CHOSEN PEOPLE TO PRAY TO A VERY IMPORTANT PERSON GOD CREATED
CALLED JESUS. ALL FAILED FOR THE JEWISH PEOPLE SEARCHING.
GOD CONTROLS ALL AND GOVERNMENT BUSINESSES
UNLIMITED POWER AND THE JEWISH PEOPLE CAN RECEIVE.
GOD MAKES AND SATAN BREAKS.
